Syrians coming to Hadassah for eye care

Two Syrian brothers scheduled to come for treatment to Hadassah Hospital will get free care — if they need it — the hospital spokesman said yesterday.

The spokesman confirmed that the two, Hashi and Ibrahim al-Atani, are scheduled to be treated at the hospital by Prof. Shaul Merin, one of Hadassah's senior ophthalmologists.

The two are said to suffer from retinal defects.

As far as is known, they will be the first Syrians to come to Israel for treatment.

The two reportedly learnt of the care available in Jerusalem from an Israeli Radio Arabic-language radio broadcast.

The Interior Ministry spokesman said yesterday that the two are expected to arrive by way of the Alentej Bridge within a few days. When they arrive they will be given three-month tourist visas, he said.

The hospital spokesman said the two would appear before the tariff committee like all other patients. If they could not afford to pay, or if the Syrian government did not allow them to take out any funds then the hospital would treat them free of charge, he said.

MONTREAL. — Canadian Labour Minister John C. Munro, accompanied by his wife and members of his staff, yesterday visited the "Good Fence" near here as guests of the Israel Defence Forces. He also toured settlements in Upper Galilee.

At a dinner in his honour in Jerusalem on Saturday night, Munro expressed admiration for Israel's practice of "joint consultations and joint policy planning by management, unions and government," and said he would like to introduce this in Canada.

Munro, who has been the guest of Labour Minister Moshe Baran, ends his four-day visit today.

Airline security bill passes first reading

Jerusalem Post Reporter

A bill to increase security on airlines and combat terrorism in air travel — the most comprehensive in the world — was referred to committee yesterday after it passed its first reading in the Knesset.

The new law gives the Transport Minister broader powers to institute security requirements to all airlines operating in, to, or from Israel. It provides for searching passengers and cargo and forbids airlines to transport passengers who refuse to be searched, or cargo whose owners did not permit security checks.

The law imposes a three-year prison sentence and a $250,000 fine on violators, and provides for restricting or denying landing rights or operating licences of offending airlines.

Ya'acobi gave the Knesset details.

Tourists with justified gripes get money back

By HAIM SHAPIRO

TEL AVIV. — The Tourism Ministry paid out $132,000 and $4,000 last year to tourists whose complaints were checked and judged to be valid.

This was reported by Abraham Rozman, Director-General of the Tourism Ministry, in a press conference at Beit Sokolow here, summing up the past tourist year. He said that 1976 was Israel's best tourist year so far, with 795,000 arrivals.

This was 9 per cent more than the previous tourist peak year of 1972, when 727,000 tourists arrived. In 1975, there were 620,000 visitors, he said.

tion, the nature of the complaint against him, or who filed the complaint.

The ethics committee presumably will also examine Goshen's connection with suspended Kupa Holim head Asher Yadin. In the indictment against Yadin, it claimed that Yadin, referred deals to Goshen for a kickback of 15 per cent. Between 1973 and 1976, Goshen handled 27 real estate deals for Kupa Holim for a total of $1,666,000 in fees, of which Yadin allegedly received $250,000.

Goshen is a member of the Central Committee of the Labour Party. As a friend of Yadin and Ofer, he carried out many land deals for Shikun Ovdin, Kupa Holim and Solel Boneh.

Goshen, who will be a state witness in the Yadin trial, was first investigated by the police in September, before the investigation of Yadin began. It was presumably during Goshen's investigation that police first became aware of the Neve Ya'acov land deal in which the Arab sellers of the property claimed that they did not receive as much as was listed in Shikun Ovdin's books.

Although the investigation team headed by assistant commander Benveniste has ceased probing the suspicious raised against Ofer, it is examining the possible involvement of other persons.

ILP, Aloni balk at Yadin's conditions But merger talks continue

By YOSEF GOELL
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Negotiations on possible mergers between parties in the centre of the political map continued this week on two fronts. But meetings between the Independent Liberals and Shulamit Aloni's Citizens Rights Movement and the Yadin-Shimul group are understood to have led to an impasse.

The stumbling block is understood to be the Yadin group's insistence on the dissolution of the ILP and the CRM and the resignation of their Knesset Members from the House as a condition for their joining a united movement.

Both movements consider these demands unreasonable and unrealistic. Yesterday they held talks on the formation of an electoral bloc in which they would appear in the forthcoming elections in competition with the Yadin movement.

Begin bill would avert minority caretaker gov

Jerusalem Post Knesset Reporter

Likud leader Menachem Begin yesterday tabled a private member's bill in the Knesset calling for an amendment to the Basic Law: The Government, which would provide a constitutional alternative to a caretaker government holding office without the support of a Knesset majority.

At present, under the Basic Law, the President, following new elections to the Knesset, must charge a Knesset member with the formation of a new government if a majority of the House asks him in writing to do so. Such action by the President is not required in case of the resignation of the government, as was the case recently.

Begin's amendment would extend this requirement to such cases. He believes it is intolerable that the Basic Law has a built-in requirement that makes it nearly automatic for a caretaker government to hold office, without majority support, for months on end.

(Last month when resigned, President Begin the out-going Prime Minister, the task of forming a government, although it was clear that no longer minority caretaker majority.)

In the present division in the Knesset it is not probable as it would have been past that a number of factions could unite behind a caretaker government.

Mordechai Ben-Porat (Meretz) also tabled a private member's bill calling for an amendment to the Basic Law which would extend the requirement for a caretaker government to hold office, without majority support, for months on end.

The proposed limitation would not affect the number of without portfolio.

Likud to form 'leadership team'

Jerusalem Post Political Reporter

The Likud Executive has decided to form a leadership team of 15 people who will include the bloc's principal candidates for ministerial positions should the Likud win the Knesset election in May.

The team will be formed six weeks before the election, because only then will the list of candidates for the Knesset be ready, Herut's spokesman told The Jerusalem Post yesterday.

The bloc's leaders, however, do not intend to form a shadow cabinet.

They reason that some candidates would have to go to coalition, and that party members were not included in the cabinet might be antagonized.

The Executive also will convene the 300-member Council on February 13. The council will consider planks of the election platform. Some expected it to choose Menachem Begin to head the list. Other on the Knesset slate will be by their respective parties — the Liberals, and La'am comprise the Likud.

Car expenses increase retroactive to June

Jerusalem Post Staff

New car-allowance rates have been approved by the Inter-ministerial Vehicle Committee, retroactive to June 1, 1976.

Since April 1976, when the current rates were set, the cost of petrol and spare parts has risen by an average of 28 per cent, as has depreciation. The committee accordingly approved higher car allowances, as follows:

Total kms. per year	Set monthly allowance (IL)	old	new
6,000-8,999	520	675
9,000-12,999	730	945
13,000-14,999	930	1,215
Over 15,000	1,100	1,440

These rates apply to the civil service. Most other enterprises that pay car allowances follow in. The set monthly allowance depreciation, interest and maintenance. In addition, variable — for petrol and oil — will be increased from 48 to 80 gilo kilometres.

Eligible car-owners may retroactively payment of the expense owing them from last year. For drivers in the lowest range bracket, this will amount to $1,600. If paid in sum, it will put most workers into a higher income bracket for that month. Expenses for various other categories, such as trips, roads by special permit, scooter rates for lecturers, their own vehicles, etc., have been increased.

Staff wants shares in company

Zim workers may strike to 'deepen company ties'

By YA'ACOV FRIEDLER
Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — Zim's staff committee has threatened to strike the shipping company to promote its demand for "deeper employee identification" with the company. Yesterday the committee took a first step by calling on the labour council to sanction the declaration of a labour dispute.

The apparent contradiction in their action was explained to The Jerusalem Post by committee chairman Uri Zuckerman. He said that, in 1975, the late general manager, Moshe Kashtan had proposed that, to deepen employee identification, Zim should distribute 10 per cent of its shares to the employees on shore and at sea as an incentive and as a form of participation in management. The committee had agreed to the scheme.

The company's board of directors had also unanimously approved the idea, and last August the management asked the committee and the seamen's unions to delegate representatives to a special committee to work out the details of the share distribution. The committee, however, never met, Zuckerman said.

Now the general manager has announced that the Israel Corporation, which holds 50 per cent of Zim's shares, has changed its mind and objects to the scheme, man said. Instead of share employees have been offered a share bonus of $110m. "But we rejected the offer," Zuckerman stated.

According to Zuckerman, Zim Corporation had decided to back out because it wanted its full 50 per cent, and not its major voice in Zim affairs. He added that, if he were in the labour council approved the strike, they would go "all the way" for the shares. He added the government and the His representatives on the Zim still support the scheme.

In regard to the employee demand for shares, the Zim man said yesterday: "The law not covered by the work co- and therefore is not ground for strike action. The idea had been raised as a way of profit-sharing with the employees; but after decision was taken, difficulties in its execution. The board has fore proposed to grant cash share bonuses for past years, and to wait until the new chairman assumes office before to work out share distribution plans for the future."

Tel Aviv Cinerama to become city's central fire station

By SARAH HONIG
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The Cinerama movie theatre will in six months become the city's chief fire station. This was announced here yesterday after the Municipal Executive decided to spend $110.5m. on the purchase of the circular building on Rehov Yitzhak Sadeh.

The city has long been looking for a new station as the main headquarters for its fire-fighting units. The present main station on Basel Street is old, cramped and ill-suited for the new, highly sophisticated fire-fighting equipment purchased by the municipality since 1974.

Another problem is that the Basel Street station is not geographically well-placed. Most of the serious fires in town occur in industrial areas, particularly in workshops located in clusters of shanties on Derech Petah Tikva, Rehov Hahager and in Givat Herzl. The first two streets are only minutes away from the Cinerama, and the Givat Herzl area is also easily accessible; whereas the present station is far from the fire-prone areas and the way to them is often clogged by traffic jams.

Experts who checked the Cinerama building are satisfied not only its location but also with its structure itself, which they can quite easily be converted into a fire station with ample room for offices, equipment and living quarters. The large parking lot to be excellent for the department's new vehicles.

Converting the movie theatre into a fire station will cost $110.5m, but the city council has a bargain in view of estimates the construction of a new station could not be managed for $115.0m.

Demonstrators jeer Peking mayor, military commander

HONGKONG. — Peking protesters, demanding the reinstatement of ousted Vice-Premier Teng Hsiao-ping as Premier, carried their campaign to the seat of power on Sunday night.

Troops were called out and at least part of the capital appeared to be in a state of alert after demonstrators gathered at the entrance to the Chung Nan Hai area in the Forbidden City, according to Peking sources.

Chung Nan Hai is the area where most, if not all, of the top leaders reside. Many state offices also are located in the heavily guarded area in the heart of the city.

Posters calling on Party Chairman Hua Kuo-feng and other members of the Party Central Committee to return Teng to power and give him the premiership proliferated during weekend activities commemorating the first anniversary of the death of Premier Chou En-lai.

Posters also appeared attacking two members of the Party's powerful political bureau. The two, Wu Teh and Chen Yi, also held top jobs in Peking. As chairman of the Peking Revolutionary Committee, Wu is, in effect, the capital's mayor. Chen is commander of the key Peking military region.

Wu and Chen were accused of being too closely associated with the so-called "Gang of Four" in the past. Wu has been criticized previously but this was the first time Chen had come under attack in public. The posters put up on Sunday said they should be transferred from Peking, sources in the capital said.

Large crowds, estimated by some observers at more than a million persons, marched through Peking's Tian An Men Square on Sunday to pay tribute to Chou and to denounce the "Gang of Four."

Despite the massive outpouring of grief and tribute to Chou, the man of the hour was Teng.

Describing the atmosphere in the capital on Sunday night as "highly charged," Peking residents compared it with the situation at the time of the 1966-67 Cultural Revolution.

When some of the demonstrators went to the entrance of Chung Nan Hai to call for Teng's return, troops were called out and the demonstrators dispersed peacefully. The troops were unarmed, according to Japanese press reports from Peking.

Other reports from Peking residents said heavy security measures were put into effect in the area around Tian An Men Square and the Forbidden City.

However, diplomatic sources and other China analysts said the campaign to reinstate Teng probably has the blessing, if not the direct support, of at least some of the top leaders.

Rhodesian black nationalist leader Robert Mugabe greets supporters as he arrived in Lusaka at the weekend for talks with British mediator Ivor Richard, and to take part in a summit meeting with the heads of the five "Front Line" African states. (AP Radiophoto)

Richard fails to move black leader

LUSAKA. — British negotiator Ivor Richard met leaders of the "Patriotic Front" Rhodesian nationalist alliance here yesterday, but apparently failed to win their support for his settlement proposals.

The Front, however, received a major boost Sunday when black Africa's five "front line" states pledged full support for the alliance, led by Robert Mugabe and Joshua Nkomo.

Richard, chairman of the stalled Rhodesian conference in Geneva, spent two-and-a-half hours with the nationalists, explaining ideas for an interim government to guide Rhodesia to legal independence and black majority rule.

The British envoy is on a Southern African tour to try to create a formula for a transitional administration that will allow the black-white negotiation in Geneva to restart.

But after yesterday's meeting, Nkomo and Mugabe said they had not altered their own proposals for an interim government, which differ sharply from his.

Richard has been pressing British commissioner of power to play a balancing act between Rhodesia's black whites in an interim government that a national security should look after the country and police during the interim.

The Patriotic Front, however, British representative should have limited powers and that the liberation movement be ready for security during the period.

The inconclusive nature of day's talks could well be a blow for Richard, who had been expected to return to South Africa to meet black African support for the and with guarantees of a major and orderly switch to majority rule.

Filipinos link pact with Moslem rebels to oil

MANILA. — A Philippine government agreement in principle to create an autonomous Moslem region in the southern Philippines may have been the result of an oil embargo threat by Islamic Conference nations, sources said yesterday.

The sources, Christian leaders, said the pact was a response to a bitter rivalry emerging between Moslems and Christians over control of the 13-province region.

The agreement was reached in Libya on December 24 with Moslem rebels under the leadership of the Moro National Liberation Front (MNLF). A second round of negotiations is to begin in Libya on February 5.

More than 10,000 persons have been killed in the rebellion, which began shortly after President Ferdinand Marcos declared martial law in September 1972.

One widely-respected Christian from Mindanao said yesterday: "It is wondered here if the Islamic Conference nations would not impose an economic sanction through an oil embargo and send more arms and possibly mercenaries should the second Tripoli conference in the Minnapala Region is for Moslem rule includes Mindanao, the island of Palawan and the Sulu Archipelago, total population of about 2.2 million, only 1.8 million are Moslem.

A copy of the 16-point agreement mentions no mention of the plebiscite Marcos has said held to determine which of provinces wishes to belong to the region.

A preface to the agreement, states that establishment of the autonomous region "within the realm of the sovereign and territorial integrity of the Republic of the Philippines."

"The pent-up feeling among non-Moslems, especially the Christian majority, is that they have taken for granted too much long and that the government been bending backward to dealing with the MNLF spokesman for a sector of the Moslem community in the south."

He warned of a "Chibachibach" and a reversion to hostilities, dormant for five years, between Christian vigilantes and Moslems. (UPI)

Sapper killed by Ulster explosion

BELFAST. — A British Army bomb disposal expert died yesterday while trying to dismantle a home-made bomb in a border village. An anonymous telephone caller said the Provisional wing of the Irish Republican Army claimed responsibility.

Police evacuated part of the border village of Newtown Butler, (104 km. south-west of Belfast, Ire.)

U.S. planning for war in space

WASHINGTON. — THE U.S. Defence Department has begun drawing up plans to enable the United States to wage war in space, spurred by concern over Soviet tests of a hunter-killer satellite, according to the "Washington Post."

Satellites that can sound alarms if they're approached or attacked and fire at an enemy satellite if it draws close are being developed by the Pentagon, the newspaper reported yesterday.

Concern was touched off last

February when the Soviet resumed tests of its hunter-killer satellite, an unmanned orb that blows itself up and destroys opponent in the blast, the "Post" said.

"At present, the U.S. has a Big Bird reconnaissance satellite in orbit, where it stays five months before being replaced by a new one. If the Big Bird were destroyed by surprise, it might be months before Air Force could replace it."

Carter church rejects black member

PLAINS, Georgia. — Members of the Plains Baptist Church, with U.S. President-elect Jimmy Carter in attendance, voted on Sunday to reject the membership bid of the Reverend Clemon King, a Black minister and politician.

Georgia State Senator Hugh Carter, the President-elect's first cousin and church clerk, reported after the closed church meeting that the vote was unanimous and that the President-elect voted.

Senator Carter said that a religious committee had recommended King not be admitted because of cooperation and the fact does not live in Plains.

It was King's highly public decision to seek membership in the church just before the November presidential election that in November 14 vote to allow his worship and seek membership in the church.

State Dept. puzzled by 'Carter's Whiz Kids'

WASHINGTON. — The new policy-making team at the U.S. State Department is basically complete, and officials who must work with the new appointees are studying their names for clues about the future.

So far, the internal reaction has been mild disappointment and some puzzlement.

One area of puzzlement is the selection of Lucy Benson, 49, a former president of the League of Women Voters with no direct experience in the formation of foreign policy, as Undersecretary of State for Security Assistance.

Cyrus Vance, Secretary of State-designate, was expected to bring in his own trusted team, as did Henry Kissinger. But the two men expected to be his key personal assistants, David Aaron and Peter Tarnoff, have not been identified with Vance.

Aaron was on Vice President-elect Walter Mondale's Senate staff, and Tarnoff is a Foreign Service officer who used to be an aide to Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge.

The most controversial anticipated appointment is that of Richard Holbrooke, a 35-year-old ex-Foreign Service officer who quit the Department to become editor of "Foreign Policy" magazine.

Holbrooke, regarded as brilliant but abrasive, will come back into the Department as Assistant Secretary of State for East Asia.

One official compared it to "a second lieutenant resigning his commission (in the army) and then coming back a few years later as a political major general without going through the rest of the ranks."

Some of the Vance appointments, such as Holbrooke, have already been grouped into a category called "Carter's Whiz Kids."

"The Whiz Kids" also include Anthony Lake, a member of the transition team, who will head the policy planning staff, and Richard Moose, who will be Deputy Undersecretary for Management.

Both are former staff aides to Henry Kissinger when he was at the National Security Council, and both resigned in 1969 because they disagreed with his Southeast Asia policy.

The key man in the Vance lineup at the State Department will probably be Philip Habib, who is being held over as Undersecretary for Political Affairs — the Department's top career post.

Habib is respected by professionals in the Department and was also a "Vance man." He served as Vance's assistant during the Paris peace talks on Vietnam in 1969 and is a former ambassador to South Korea. (UPI)

Accused Soviet spy to request right to hold news conference

NEWARK. — The court-appointed lawyer for Ivan Rogalsky, a former merchant seaman accused of spying for the Soviet Union, says he wants a Federal judge to allow his client to hold a news conference.

"He feels he's been treated unfairly," said attorney Roger Lowenstein on Sunday. "He feels he's been branded and pre-judged and wants to respond."

Lowenstein said the 34-year-old Rogalsky, who defected from Russia five years ago, wanted an opportunity to address not only American reporters but also representatives of the foreign media, including Tass.

Rogalsky, a mechanic, now unemployed, was to appear in court yesterday for a hearing on whether he should receive free legal representation. During his arraignment on Saturday, he said that he had no money. But U.S. Attorney Jonathan Goldstein said Rogalsky has been able to live comfortably although he has no visible means of support.

Rogalsky was arrested Friday and accused of obtaining secret American space satellite documents from an RCA Corporation engineer working as an undercover agent. The FBI tailed Rogalsky for at least six months to learn the identity of his Soviet contact and saw him meet Yevgeny Karpov, a Soviet diplomat serving as Second Secretary to the Soviet delegation to the United Nations.

The FBI said it had suspected for some time that Karpov was working for the KGB.

The engineer, Paul Nekrasov, worked at RCA's astro-electronics division in Hightstown, New Jersey. He had a Defence Department secret clearance to work on space satellite communications components and other defence projects, but an RCA spokesman refused to discuss details of Nekrasov's work.

Three workers shot, thousands of Basques on strike in Spain

MADRID. — Left-wing agitators calling for a general strike yesterday opened fire with guns and tommyguns in Spain's biggest aircraft factory, wounding at least three persons, Spanish news agency reports said.

In the Basque region, tens of thousands of industrial workers struck to protest police action against pro-amnesty demonstrators on Sunday when a 15-year-old protester was killed in yet unexplained circumstances.

The shooting incident occurred in the Construcciones Aeronauticas S.A. (CASA) aircraft factory in Madrid as five or six members of the outlawed Reconstituted Communist Party, a far-left splinter group, were distributing leaflets urging workers to join a general strike in support of the release of political prisoners.

Police have said that the party is the parent organization of the "Anti-Fascist Resistance Group Oct. 1" (Grapo), the mysterious urban guerrilla group that kidnapped Spain's No. 1 government official.

Grapo is holding Antonio Maria de Oriol y Urquijo, president of the Council of State, to exchange him against political prisoners. It appealed to Spaniards last week to back them by going on strike.

First reports on the factory incident said the shooting started when guards tried to stop the agitators.

The three injured were identified by hospital authorities as aircraft workers. They said one was in serious condition following surgery to remove bullets from his hip. The other two were shot in the leg.

The Basque stoppages appeared to be a protest of the death of Juan Manuel Iglesias, 15, rather than a response to the far-left calls for a general strike.

Iglesias, a trade school student, was found dead on a concrete patio after club-swinging police made numerous charges to break up 10,000 pro-amnesty demonstrators in the Bilbao suburb of Sestao. His death caused most political parties of the Basque region to issue sharply worded protests. (UPI)

Paper says Russians dumped $500 m. on money markets

BOSTON. — The Soviet Union has dumped more than $500m. on the Zurich money market since December 20 in speculation against the U.S. dollar, the Boston "Herald American" reported yesterday.

The report from Paris, based on banking sources, said the Soviets sought to weaken the dollar to increase "dollar-based imports" to the Soviet Union and to aid a return to higher gold prices.

"The dollar has had tough sledding on international money markets during the past few weeks and one reason appeared to be Soviet speculations against it," the "Herald" said.

The "Herald" said the Russians are thought to have waited for a moment when the dollar became vulnerable to launch their own operation.

"The drop in U.S. interest rates, the substantial American trade deficit last year and uncertainty over the incoming Carter administration have all contributed to the dollar's current weakness," the newspaper said.

"The Russians want to help that weakness along," the paper said, "for two reasons. The less important is a belief that a weaker dollar will make it possible for them to expand their own dollar-based imports."

The second reason, the "Herald" said, was that the Russians want a return to high gold prices and believe this can come about as "a result of another steep decline in confidence in the dollar." (UPI)

BUDGET — Sweden's new non-Socialist government moved austerity measures with continued expansion of social reforms in its first budget presented in Parliament yesterday. The budget total is a record $30b.

Unwanted lawyers seek Gilmore delay

SALT LAKE CITY. — The attorneys who have been told by convicted murderer Gary Gilmore to get out of his life met yesterday to plan how to delay Gilmore's firing-squad execution scheduled for sunrise on January 17.

V. Jinks Dahney, coordinating attorney of the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), declined to say what action was planned, but said a statement would be released shortly. Other lawyers at the meeting represented Death Row inmates in Utah and elsewhere.

Gilmore is in isolation at Utah State Prison, doing solitary punishment for several prison infractions. His attorney, who talked with Gilmore on Sunday, said the 38-year-old convict was relaxed and confident his execution would occur as planned.

He was amused, the lawyer said of Gilmore's reaction to the ACLU's notice to fight his execution. (AP)

$111.6m. no-interest Opec loans

VIENNA. — The Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries yesterday announced interest-free loans to help 24 developing nations overcome balance of payments problems.

Opec's special fund, using oil revenues to aid Third World economic development, said loan agreements were being signed in Vienna yesterday and today for the allocation of $111.6m.

India, with a loan of $21.8m., was the biggest single beneficiary in yesterday's list of allocations.

Egypt was given the second biggest loan, $14.4m., Bangladesh $13.5m., and Mozambique $6.5m. The smallest allocation, $1.5m., went to the Cape Verde Islands. (Reuters)

Bayern won't field two top stars today

By PAUL KOHN
Jerusalem Post Sports Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Bayern Munich, the world and European club soccer champions, will field a much weakened team against the Israel national side at the Ramat Gan Stadium this afternoon. The match kicks off at 5 p.m., and will be broadcast live on Israel TV.

The German champions, who have held the European Cup for the past three years, arrived here with 14 players and without five of their top internationals. Centre-forward Gerd Mueller and goalkeeper Sepp Maier will be among the absent, but world "footballer of the year" Franz Beckenbauer will captain the team.

"We intended to bring our strongest team, but have been hard hit by injuries," coach Detmar Kramer told the press here last night. "Our league season resumes on Saturday and we have doubts about the fitness of several key players. The game against Israel will be a very useful preparation for our league games, especially as we will be testing several young players," Kramer said.

Besides Beckenbauer, world names in the Bayern line-up today will be striker Uli Hoeneß, who has played more than 30 times for Germany, Konnie Torstensson, the Swedish international, and Hans Schwarzenbeck. Wes Schenk, Willie Reisinger and Eddie Kirschner are German Olympic team members.

Uri Malmillan and Eli Leventhal return to the Israeli team. Malmillan, who missed the game against the West German amateurs last week because of injury, will replace Yaron Os. And Leventhal comes in for the injured Mordechai Spiegler. Coach David Schweitzer will retain 22-year-old "Muti" Leon at left back, and the off-form Meir Nizami at right back.

Ramirez and Gottfried signed for tennis meet

By JACK LEON

Jerusalem Post Sports Reporter
TEL AVIV. — Mexico's Raul Ramirez and American Brian Gottfried, who were both among the world's top ten players last year, are among six stars just signed up for Israel's first Grand Prix tennis championships in May.

Prize money for the week-long meet, to take place at the Israel Tennis Centre (ITC) in Ramat Hasharon, is to be $75,000. The tournament is part of Colgate's 1977 Grand Prix circuit of the Association of Tennis Professionals.

The other four definite entries are Americans Stan Smith, Bob Lutz, Fred McNeil and Sherwood Steward, ITC Chairman Harold Landessberg, of Philadelphia, told The Post yesterday. A total of 30 overseas players and two local racquets will compete in the "men-only" event, which consists of singles and doubles matches.

At Wimbledon last year, Ramirez and Gottfried (who is Jewish) won the men's doubles title, while Ramirez was a singles semi-finalist. Both had outstanding records, earning them places in last month's Commercial Union Grand Prix Masters Tournament in Houston, for the world's top eight players.

Smith is former Wimbledon and U.S. Open champion, and he and Lutz were doubles partners in three of the American teams which won the Davis Cup Challenge Round. They have also won the U.S. and Australian Open doubles titles. Stewart and McNeil, yet another celebrated partnership, are second to Smith and Lutz in the U.S. They won the Masters doubles last month, upsetting Ramirez and Gottfried in a five-set final.

Landessberg is now negotiating with Arthur Ashe and Roscoe Tanner, of the U.S., and Argentina's Guillermo Vilas.

Though Sabra Liquors, the new Tel Aviv-Sheraton Hotel and El Al are supporting the championships, no actual sponsor has yet been found, and the prize money and other expenses have been underwritten by the tournament committee.

Landessberg reported. He hopes that local sponsorship will soon be forthcoming for one of the biggest international sports gatherings ever staged in Israel.

Six-point Bank Leumi lead

Spearheads equities advance

AVIV. — Equities enjoyed their session of broad advances today as trading volume approached the 150m. mark. Financials spearheaded the rally, with Bank Leumi leading the way on a six-point advance to 280.5, a gain of 1.5 points since the previous session. The index rose 1.77 points to 181.77.

The Natad investment dollar responded to a half a million dollar demand and rose by 10 to 11.88. Sources close to the exchange are continuing to recommend the purchase of the investment currency at present levels.

The index-linked bond market continued to be uneven, as trading volume continued considerably under that established by the equity market.

How to attract youth to industry

By LEA LEVAVI
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Industry's failure to attract enough workers is at least partially the manufacturer's own fault, Avraham (Buma) Shavit told an audience of manufacturers and educators here recently.

"There was a time when we cried about how industry couldn't afford to pay higher wages. Eventually we paid anyway, but in the meantime we succeeded in chasing capable young people away because we didn't want to work in a place that couldn't afford to pay... We also haven't sold the idea of industry; the public doesn't know what a modern, sophisticated industry we have in this country and what a beautiful thing production is," Shavit said.

Educators from the technical education system were the guests of the Manufacturers' Association for a study day, visiting plants and learning something about how industry (or, at least, the cream of it) functions. They then returned to the Manufacturers' Association where Education Minister Aharon Yadin and Shavit discussed the long-standing problem of how to attract more graduates of technical schools to work in industry.

"I don't think it's a question of pay," Shavit said. "Though there is beginning to be an unemployment problem with unskilled workers, a good skilled worker who gets IL220 a day today, can get IL250 if he leaves to take a job at a neighbouring plant."

Yadin said his goal is for every child to finish 12 grades of school, no matter on what level, and to remain within the educational system until army age. "We all know that the dropouts are from families of Eastern backgrounds and from poor families. We all know they may end up in crime, unless the Ministry of Labour gets to them in time to enrol them in apprenticeship programmes."

The minister suggested that students in technical high schools work in real factories in addition to,

Apprentice working in industry or instead of, doing practical work in school workshops. This idea was vigorously approved by the educators taking part in the discussion, but the manufacturers who spoke up did not mention it.

The manufacturers did, however, discuss the Minister's desire to see all youngsters complete 12 grades. Some of them were alarmed by the idea; who will work the machines, they asked.

People who finish 12th grade want to be foremen, at least. One man suggested bringing pupils into industry at the age of 14, implying that they would then stay there for the rest of their lives. This was a lack of an alternative. This aroused Dora Berman, principal of the Ort high school in Lod. (Some of her own students, by the way, are doing exactly what the Minister had suggested: working in factories while attending school.)

"You know that your son and my son won't be the ones to leave school at 14 to go work in a factory," Mrs. Berman said. "It will be the poor children from Eastern backgrounds. We will be widening the gap instead of narrowing it. Even someone who operates a machine should have a general education and finish high school, even if on a low level." She accused the manufacturers of wanting "robots."

Shavit was on the defensive. "We don't want robots. We want to give anyone a chance to move up in accordance with his abilities. What my colleagues are trying to say here is that today the tendency seems to be that either you're an engineer or technician, or you become one of the 20,000 who don't work or study, and you're worthless."

"Anyone who wants to employ high school dropouts will have them available for at least the next ten years," the Minister said. "But I don't think you have anything to worry about, even if our goal of keeping everyone in high school is reached. There is such a diversity of levels in employment, that the pyramidal structure can be maintained. There will always be someone at the bottom," he added.

"You complain that too many technical school graduates work in banks after the army," Mr. Yadin continued. "I once suggested to the Finance Minister that we give money to the local authorities outright, instead of giving loans through the banks and encouraging the growth of banking. I think we have too many service agencies. This is a country with fewer people than London, but with about 300 separate local authorities."

It was decided to form committees on both the national and local level to encourage closer relations between industry and the technical schools. It was also suggested to bring technical teachers closer to industry by sending them to work in plants at intervals.

Japan may fall from economic stardom

TOKYO. — "Japan Inc." the mystical generating force behind this country's rise to world economic stardom has slipped a cog. A radical change in the political climate has dealt a hard blow to the decision-making process — which in the past was based on a close alliance between Government, big business and the bureaucracy.

As a result, Japan's consensus-making process has been weakened in flexibility and efficiency. This year the nation's top politicians, businessmen and bureaucrats will be struggling to find a new mechanism to replace the old behind-closed-doors system.

This is the main result of the December 3 elections in which the ruling Liberal Democrats came desperately close to losing their majority. They can now no longer govern alone effectively.

For the first time the bureaucrats will have to take into account the views of the opposition in formulating policy, which will not always be to the advantage of business.

Experts reckon the political uncertainty will be reflected in the performance of the Japanese economy in 1977, which grew only 0.3 per cent in the third quarter of fiscal 1976 instead of the projected 7.3 per cent.

There is no sign of corporate investment picking up. Consumer spending is still sluggish, and for once the Japanese cannot depend on exports to make up for poor performance at home.

Booming exports have helped Japan maintain one of the lowest unemployment rates for an industrial power (less than 2.5 per cent of the work force). But a decline of foreign sales could deal a heavy blow to the economy in fiscal 1977 and that is exactly what is now in prospect.

But if they cannot export, Japan's most important industries could be in deep trouble, further depressing the domestic economy. In television, for example, nine out of 10 Japanese homes now have a colour set. The industry here, therefore, has no choice but to export or die. The same goes for shipbuilding.

Politics will play a big part in the country's financial decisions. All the parties are pushing for vote-winning policies, like a massive tax cut, in view of the Upper House election scheduled for the middle of this year.

In these circumstances it is feared the Government's deficits will quickly swell and there will be a full-scale rekindling of inflation, which over the past few months has been brought very much under control. In addition, because of the political instability companies are holding back on bold investment programmes.

Until the political uncertainty has been resolved, businessmen are being very cautious, another factor in convincing economists that it will be difficult for the Government to achieve the seven per cent growth target set for fiscal 1977. (Otna)

Work between tea breaks is the rule in Britain

LONDON. — An official report published in London last week confirms the widely held international view that the British do not work as hard as Americans or Europeans — and that they waste more working hours than they should.

For two decades visitors to England have noticed the lax working habits of the British: their propensity to start work at least an hour later than other countries, the long lunches of executives and managers, time spent away from the work bench or office desk at tea and coffee breaks, and their poor productivity when actually at work.

But until now the British have been able to answer back. Long lunches, they say, are justified because of the business that is transacted at the meal table. Tea breaks are needed to relieve the boredom. And poor productivity claim the trade unions, is because of lack of investment in modern machinery and equipment.

These excuses are rejected by a major British Government report of a two-year study by managers, civil servants and trade unionists into the comparative performance of the British on large construction sites. The study, organised by the National Economic Development Organisation, found that British engineering and construction standards were as high or higher than those in the U.S. or Europe — but that both management and workers took longer to achieve the result.

The NEDO working party examined in detail five major areas — comparing similar projects in Britain, France, Germany, the Netherlands, Italy and the U.S. They discovered that foreign project times were much shorter, less prone to delays, and carried out with less manpower.

Of the three major oil distilleries built to similar specifications, the Dutch provided the fastest and cheapest construction, being completed in two years exactly. The one in Britain took twice as long — four years and one month — while the Haifa is the third-largest Mediterranean port handling container cargo according to the latest bulletin of the Israel Institute for Shipping Research. The port handled 92,340 containers in 1975.

The movement of containers through Haifa was only slightly less than that of Marseilles, which handled 95,372 units, and was 20 per cent larger than that of Barcelona, the fourth-ranking Mediterranean port. First place was taken by Genoa, which handled 162,000 containers.

Netanya hotel loses tourist grading

Jerusalem Post Reporter

The Galei Zenn Hotel in Netanya has lost its rating as an approved tourist hotel, the Tourism Ministry announced yesterday.

The announcement said the hotel, which formerly had three stars, was downgraded because it had no full-time professional manager, as required by the Law. The decision was made by the Hotel Advisory Board.

The hotel will retain its former status if and when it convinces the board that it is being properly run, the announcement said.

BEN-GURION AIRPORT — Following last week's "sanctions" by the engineers and technicians at Ben-Gurion Airport, the Transport Ministry has agreed to send 28 workers for refresher courses abroad this year.

The control tower workers held a meeting last week to discuss the Ministry's refusal to approve any more trips abroad. During their meeting the airport was paralysed as there was no one to control air traffic.

Arab leaders want help from Labour

TIRA — Leaders from Arab villages in the Little Triangle Sunday called on the Labour Party to support a new, labour-orientated list which would fight the extremist movements.

The leaders, all heads or members of local councils in the Sharon and Hadera districts, met with the director-general of the Prime Minister's office, Amos Eran, Deputy-Agriculture Minister Jaber Mu'adi and the Prime Minister's acting Adviser for Arab Affairs, Binyamin Gur-Arye.

The leaders said that while the Arab village has made tremendous advances in the last few years, it is still discriminated against by government agencies. Tira local council leader Tarik Abed el-Hai cited an example saying that the government's allocation for Jewish local councils was IL600 per head of population, while Arab councils get only IL400.

The Histadrut secretary in the Little Triangle said that "the Arab street is burning," and that the party's support is needed to fight the extremist movements.

Market holds modest gains

NEW YORK. — The stock market held firm through most of yesterday's session, holding onto its modest rally it began last week. Trading was moderate. The Dow Jones Average of 30 industrial stocks rose two points half an hour before close. Gainers held a small edge over losers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues. The Dow picked up about 5 points last Thursday and Friday after dropping more than 26 in the first three trading days of the New Year.

Analysts said investors still seemed to be operating cautiously in the wake of the surprise decline after New Years. But they also noted some favourable economic news. A survey found a surge in confidence among U.S. consumers, in the closing stages of 1976. (AP)

A killer at bay

IT IS HARDLY SURPRISING that the Syrian Ambassador to Paris, acting on behalf of all the Arab envoys there, should have asked for the "immediate release" of Fatah gangster Abu Daoud.

This Syrian initiative was not prompted by any special knowledge regarding Abu Daoud's innocence of the crime attributed to him. Nor does it reflect a belief that terrorism is an unmitigable political activity which merits no penalty.

As a matter of fact the Syrian Government has already made it plain enough, as plain as public hangings can make, that it is apt to view terrorism — even Arab-Palestinian terrorism — as a most heinous transgression; that is, when it is directed against the Syrian Government. But that apparently is not an accusation which could be levelled at Abu Daoud. Currently he is charged "only" with having engineered the massacre of the Israeli athletes at the 1972 Munich Olympics.

So far no Arab regime has endorsed the opinion that the slaughter in Munich was a punishable offence.

The French Government, which now holds Abu Daoud, does, however, share that opinion; which implies an obligation to help the cause of justice. It makes no difference that President Giscard has been presented with something of a fait accompli by his own counter-intelligence, which obviously had its own good reasons for wanting the man. Nor does it make any difference that the international warrant for Abu Daoud's arrest was issued at West Germany's request only after Paris took action against him.

Two separate applications for extradition may now be expected. One should come from Bonn. The West German Government need not be especially enthused about this, remembering how the three Munich killers who survived the clash with the Bavarian police were later released under terrorist blackmail. Yet that is the least it can do, in view of the fact that Munich is German soil, and that Foreign Minister Genscher has been a leading sponsor of international action to ban international terrorism.

Another application will be coming from Israel, whose citizens perished in the terrorist violence. A request for Abu Daoud's temporary detention was despatched from Jerusalem yesterday.

Thus the French will have the choice of two options, the West German and the Israeli. It would, of course, be for a court of law to determine which of the two is the weightier. Whatever the final decision, it is bound to cause M. Giscard's government some embarrassment in its relations with the Arabs. But that cannot be avoided, except by speciously arguing that Abu Daoud could not be extradited at all, because his offence was, in truth, political.

It is hard to believe that, pressed economically as it may be, France will try to solve its problem in this fashion.

The merits of a merger

THE ANNOUNCEMENT that the Egged and Dan bus cooperatives have signed a partnership agreement is the first encouraging news to emerge from this problem-ridden public service for a considerable time.

Drastic action is necessary to shake Egged out of its implacable lethargy. The company is straddled with debt, and loses money every month. The Golomb committee told it what should be done, to very little purpose. The joint committee now appointed by the two concerns to plan a merger (before a given deadline) may force Egged once and for all to pull up its socks.

There is no basis otherwise for this long-awaited unification. Dan will not join a loser. Tel Aviv company had its own time of troubles in 1969, and got out of the mess by its own efforts. Egged will have to do likewise.

Many economies are possible — provided the facilities, administrative and technical, of the two enterprises are effectively pooled. If the plan is to keep them apart so that no individual should be shifted from his job, then the merger will quite simply not go through, because the financial forecasts are going to show continued losses.

Egged has no option but to quaff the Golomb committee's medicine. It must go ahead with the sale of its real estate, in order to get rid of its most pressing creditors. It must pension off superfluous members — because there will be no seats for them in the new offices.

The licence to run Israel's domestic passenger transport is a lucrative concession, that many would be glad to inherit. According to the Dan spokesman, income per bus is at this moment 20 per cent higher in Egged than in his own concern — which suggests that Egged is well-heeled and should be able to pay its way.

The technique for doing that is to maximise the service, not to close down lines. If the busmen want to prevent intruding taxis and tenders from competing for passengers on their routes, the proper method is to provide regular bus schedules, not to give angry press conferences.

If Dan can knock that lesson into the heads of their colleagues, a long-standing problem will be solved — and the unification of the country's two complementary bus services will become a profitable reality.

IF HE DEFECTS, the key question for Mordechai Ben-Porat will be, whom he defects to. Were he to join Yadin's Democratic List, it would be an act of non-confidence in Labour, and a damaging blow to the party's prestige.

As it happens, that is not his motive for leaving (if he leaves). What he wants is more decisive, more hawkish policies. "It appears to be one of those who tried to bring Yadin into politics," he confesses. But now he is disappointed. Yadin talks of narrowing the social gap, breathing new life into the development areas. "I do not see the people behind him who will do it. Worst of all, Shimon Peres is a group into the Democratic List, though Yadin had stated previously that people may only join as individuals."

It bothers him, because Shimon will, he fears, water down Yadin's policy on foreign affairs. "Amnon Rubinstein (the Shimon leader) wrote in an article a few weeks ago that the Palestinian Arabs should enjoy self-determination in the West Bank and Gaza. He did add that their military forces must stay on the other side of the Jordan river."

But "this is nonsense. Once they have legal sovereignty over Judea and Samaria they will introduce armed troops there — with the backing of an overwhelming majority in the UN. The argument will be that a sovereign State is entitled to look after its own defence. And

READERS' LETTERS

MILITARY SERVICE FOR RELIGIOUS GIRLS

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post: Sir, — Your leader of December 23 about army duty for religious girls reminded me of what the then newly-elected Chief Rabbi of Tel Aviv, Shimon Goren, told us during a press luncheon with the Foreign Press Association on January 4, 1972.

He explained in some detail all he had achieved during his years as Chief Rabbi. One of his achievements was a source of satisfaction for him to know that everybody could now serve in Zahal, even the most observant Jew.

Asked if his eldest daughter had served in the Army, he answered in the affirmative — to the astonishment of many of those present. "You see," he said, "I had to prove that the conditions I had created were such that there was absolutely no reason for religious girls not to serve their country." Beaming, he added proudly that his daughter had become an officer.

WIZO HQ

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post:

Sir, — I appreciate Mrs. Dora Shapiro's suggestion to move World Wizo's headquarters to Jerusalem (December 21), but could she tell us where we should take the IL-20 million it would cost to put up a new building and pay severance pay to some 150 personnel?

INTEGRATION IN RELIGIOUS SCHOOLS

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post: Sir, — The handling of your December 28 article dealing with the strike at Katamon's Yehuda Halevi School is unfortunately misleading. The parents are not protesting integration; rather, they seek to promote it. Indeed it is they who are sending their children to the thoroughly integrated Yehuda Halevi School, whereas many of their friends are enrolling their children in the semi-private and selective Horowitz School in the neighbourhood which results in undermining integration.

The parents' broader aims are to ensure a workable level of integration in Jerusalem's religious educational system, for they consider integration a national and religious priority.

POLLUTION IN BEERSHEBA

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post: Sir, — According to your report of December 30, Professor Haim Darin envisages a population of half a million in Beersheba by the end of this century. He "believes that the Negev... is the best area in which to develop urban communities of high standard for millions of inhabitants."

I can only say halavai. But I pray that before we residents of Beersheba are suffocated by air pollution, the authorities will wake up and start to care about the junk we breathe. Almost nightly, we're treated to what smells like sulphur fumes — probably from the Makhteshim chemical plant. It's had enough in winter when we don't have to open our windows, but in summer, it is terrible.

Beersheba is now blossoming into a well populated, pleasant city, and steps must be taken to protect its residents.

Sitting on the fence

MORDECHAI BEN-PORAT is a Knesset Member with his own ideas, who often fails to toe the party line. Not for the first time, he now declares himself to have reached a turning point. Should he stay in the Labour Party? Reporter DAVID KRIVINE hears him out on the domestic political lineup, and on relations with the Arabs.

what shall we do — go to war over it?"

Wishy-washy policies are abhorrent to Ben-Porat. "So I'm looking — I must choose my words carefully — at the changes going on inside Likud, and particularly in Herut." It is possible that he will leave Labour and join Begin's party, provided they make some serious modifications in their traditional stance. "I can't go along with the Land of Israel mystique," he avows.

HIS SPECULATIONS are important, reflecting as they do attitudes widely prevalent in the communities with which he is associated. There are 1.2m. Jews from Arab countries in Israel, according to his reckoning.

Ben-Porat immigrated to Palestine from Iraq in 1945, devoted himself to public service from the beginning. In 1949 he was back in Iraq, helping to organize the mass departure of the entire Jewish community. He was imprisoned, tortured — but got out again.

Now 280,000 Jews from "Babylon" (as they call their former homeland) live in Israel, and he is a respected father-figure in that community. In the 1950s, he left Holon with his wife (nee in Byalistok), to become Mayor of the Immigrant township Or-Yehuda — a post he held for 15 years. He lives in that place to this day.

What is his line concerning the territories?

"When it comes to territorial concessions," says this founding member of Rafi, "I could be a dove, like Mapam — provided we got a real and durable peace in return. But that is not on the cards. 'If Assad and Sadat were ready to sign a peace agreement today, it would have no value, because the Arab peoples are not ready yet for such a radical volte-face. Making peace will take a generation. Sadat has said so. The Arabs must be brought gradually to accept what must be a fundamental change in their attitude towards Israel's existence.'

"I voted in the Knesset against the Interim Agreement with Egypt (with two other Labour MKs, Amos Horowitz and Moshe Dayan), because we got nothing in return. And look, since then Sadat has been saying that peace is not even up for discussion, only a cessation of war.

"I'm not ready to make sacrifices today against a prospect of peace in 25 years' time. Territorial concessions should be made stage by stage, each withdrawal on our part being matched by a step forward on the Arab side towards normalisation."

"I would be ready to sign a treaty delineating this process. It can contain maps already marked with the frontiers we shall reach, if all goes well, 25 years from now. I am not prepared to countenance a complete withdrawal straightaway, against promises that the Arabs cannot substantiate."

THERE SEEMS TO BE quite a gap between Ben-Porat's requirements and the policies enshrined in Herut's programme. But he senses that changes are imminent. The once monolithic band in Metzuad Ze'ev is dropping at least five of its Knesset old-timers. Bader and Landau will not stand again. The new team coming up will be less rigid, less tied to the past, more open to fresh ideas. Unfamiliar faces are appearing — Tal-Aluf Mordechai Tsipori, Technion Professor Yosef Rom. Ezer Weizman has matured, and will rise in the party's leadership.

Arik Sharon has created a new faction, Shilomzion. Ben-Porat sees this as part of the process of rejuvenation in Likud. Shilomzion is a sapling outside the Likud forest. (On the same way, Yadin's Democratic List is a sapling outside Labour, he says. Each is a fresh outgrowth of the old establishment.) Likud must move with the times, nurture the new groves.

Herut modifies its policies sufficiently to accommodate Ben-Porat's philosophy, he will leave Labour and move to the right-wing benches, where he will certainly be accorded a high position.

He does not go along with the sentimentalisation of the Arab problem that is common on the left. Ben-Porat comes from the heart of the Moslem world; he knows — in his bones — what the Arab-Jewish relationship is all about.

The world beats its breast over the plight of the Arab refugees. Yet no one spares a thought for the Jewish refugees from Arab lands. Ben-Porat is one of the two world chairmen of WOJAC, the World Organisation of Jews from Arab countries. "During the War of Independence, 390,000 Arabs left Palestine, and 600,000 Jews left their homelands in the Middle East. The PLO talk of plundered property — have you any idea how much property of ours was plundered?"

The difference is that Israel settled the refugees, at enormous expense. The Arab States did not settle theirs, even temporarily. It is not as if they lack the means. He says forcefully: "During 25 years, the Arab Governments between them have contributed $25.5m. to the camps in all. Israel alone gave $8.5m. to the Arab refugees outside Palestine."

"Inside Palestine we have spent another $70m. — on improving their condition. As a result, the Arab refugee problem no longer exists within our borders."

"The Jewish community that was uprooted from Iraq had lived there for 2,500 years, since the days of Nebuchadnezzar, and long before the Arabs appeared on the scene. Do you know what resources we had accumulated over the generations? Property, personal possessions, status — what enterprises we owned? All went by the board."

"We want that justice, compensation in the Geneva peace negotiations," he states grimly. WOJAC plan a world conference on this subject, to be held in the United States. "It will be the Brussels conference on Russia Jewry," he promises.

THE TOPIC OF DISPARITY between the European and Oriental Jewish communities bothers Ben-Porat less than might be expected. Western Jews who tend to feel guilty about the exiled Arabs feel guilty also about their relations with a privileged sector in their own society. Ben-Porat does not carry this cross. He looks upon the problem from the vantage-point of a salutary self-confidence as a member of the Sephardi community.

"There should be a 50-50 representation of Ashkenazim and Sephardim at all levels of our national life — that is a target to be reached 'fullness of time,'" he stresses. Two candidates apply for a job, a man who is better qualified should get it, never mind which community he belongs to.

"If on the other hand they have equal abilities, then I believe a Sephardi should be given the chance because — and he says it bluntly — 'the Sephardim are the underdogs.'"

He sympathises with the Panthers at the beginning, but tried to approve of them when they tried to the streets. He has another reason for disliking political groupings based on ethnic divisions. They split the country, instead of uniting it. "All of us believe in vislag galut — the fusing of the various Jewish communities into a single whole. Parties with an ethnic base have dynamic of their own. They institutionalise separation; they are sectarian, preoccupied always with the narrow and obsessive subject which is their raison d'être."

"We don't need all that," he says, and there is an optimism in his voice based on a deep-seated self-belief. "Today the situation of the Sephardim in Israel is better than it was years ago. We possess a thick layer of educated people and business leaders, who can and do take responsible positions."

More should be done to educate, house; more money should go to developing the desert townships. If this is only one portion of the national task. The people of Israel have many historic missions to accomplish. They should be tackled, all parts of the population together in a co-ordinated effort. The job concerns everybody; and its accomplishment will benefit everybody.

ISRAEL PRESS

Closing the Ofer file

DAVAT (Hizdard): "Avraham Ofer's suicide came as a profound shock to the Israeli public. Many have been asking themselves whether society as a whole acted correctly — the police in its probe and the media in their reporting — and who was to blame for creating the atmosphere that drove Ofer to his act of desperation? A close study of the sequence of events, as presented by the Attorney-General to the Cabinet, raises the question whether there was any alternative? When a complaint is lodged with the police they are duty-bound to examine it. But in no sense does the fact that a probe is being conducted add weight to the complaint itself.

"Although last Friday, the investigators had concluded that most of the complaints did not warrant any charge, neither did the Government was as yet able to state that the probe was completed, without first examining further material that only reached the police the same day. The intention was to complete the preliminary investigation as soon as possible. But apparently Ofer did not have the strength to see it through to the end.

Referring to the charges of in-discretion, the paper points out that throughout the long weeks when the probe was being conducted, it was hardly referred to in the press (except in the weekly of the reporter who actually lodged the complaint with the police), and "it is to be regretted that this self-restraint was not maintained also after the consultation at the Prime Minister's residence on January 1.

"Now the police will not be able to continue their investigation. The Attorney-General could reach no other conclusion and all agree with his statement that 'Avraham Ofer was innocent in life and remains innocent in his death.'

"However, despite the distress which has descended upon us following this tragic case, it would be mistaken to conclude that, if any future similar case arose, the authorities would not differently. There is no alternative but to investigate all complaints and every suspicion.

"In recent years, it has been argued that there is an exaggerated tendency to pick over all dubious cases. Before that it was frequently said that there was a predilection for sweeping awkward matters under the carpet. Israeli society must find the golden mean."

Vindication and release

In the last ten years Hollywood has completely confounded the pessimists who predicted that the future of U.S. films belonged to young iconoclasts working on low budgets. Simon Carlbach traces Hollywood's comeback.

AS TIME PASSES, very few of the people I knew were left in the camp, since the administration periodically shifted the prisoners from one camp to another. I imagine this was done because it takes time to prepare a prisoner, and if people are shifted around constantly they cannot get too familiar with a particular environment.

Also, the administrators in every camp were always anxious to get rid of people who could not or would not work, of hardened criminals who caused trouble, and of those who grew too popular with the prisoners.

Among the individuals who became my friends was Oleg Bedarev, who wrote children's verses and was formerly chief editor of Novosti, the largest Soviet magazine for children.

Then there was Friedman, who had been a Lend-Lease supervisor during the war and was later imprisoned as an American spy. His name appeared on one of the long lists submitted by Anna Politkovskaya, an American woman who fell in love with and married a Russian, and was then used by the KGB to incriminate hundreds of people. She wrote a notorious book about U.S. propaganda methods, deliberately using public transport in order to "forget" copies of American magazine on their seats. (This magazine is sold openly in Russia, with the agreement of the Soviet authorities, but it is not at all easy to get a copy. It generally appears on the 20th or 21st of the month in the big hotels, where foreigners are likely to stay. Even though it is expensive, it sells like hot cakes.)

ONE MORNING a warden went around the barracks and read out the names of prisoners who would not go to work after the morning line-up. My name was among them. After the others had left for work, we were told to get ready "with our things." We went through the usual medical check-up, frisking, and so on, and were then marched off to the ver-tue, the intercamp railway.

That night we stopped at a station whose name I did not see. I looked out of the barred window of my compartment at a train facing the opposite direction, and noticed that a young man and his little daughter were looking at me. The man said something to the girl and she waved at me. I felt tears coming to my eyes. I waved back. Then the young man waved and said "good night." I signed "good night" to him. After that I was told to get into the train. A law that covered political crimes. Anyone in Russia would have understood this, and the young man indicated that he had. He pointed in the direction we were travelling and stuck his thumb up, meaning that it was a good direction to be going in. He then pointed the other way and shook his hand to me and I nodded unashamedly.

When the train carrying the man and his daughter eventually pulled out of the station, they waved to me and I nodded unashamedly.

MANY DAYS later we arrived in Omak. West Siberia, where I had been arrested and where my wife and child were staying. There must have been a terrific foul-up in the paper-work for it was commonly known that the MGB never sent a prisoner to the town where he had lived before his arrest.

Since I was last there, huge camps had been constructed outside Omak, and prisoners were brought to build a new oil refinery and its associated plants. It was at one of these camps every passing day, however, the camp discipline was continued as before.

The day came when I stood in front of the commission. The procurator (who is usually the accuser) acted as counsel for the defence. He said that he had studied my case and had applied for my release 18 months ago, but his decision must have been nullified and he was surprised when my case was submitted to him again. He said there was no evidence at all in all the files that everything was based exclusively on my own testimony and that, if I denied it, there was no case against me.

I asked the commission to free me only if it was prepared to see that I was granted all the rights and duties of an ordinary citizen of the country. I repeated that I had been born abroad, that I had lived as people lived there, and that I had not committed any crimes. I had written my curriculum vitae dozens of times, both before coming to the Soviet Union and after, and I had been sentenced solely on the grounds of what I had written. If they didn't want me to come to the Soviet Union, they should not have given me a visa to enter it; but seeing that I had received that visa, and I had not committed a crime, and I least I expected was not to be discriminated against.

The chairman interrupted me, saying that he understood what I wanted. He then asked whether any of the members had any questions. A short and very fat person walked up to me and asked how I could have agreed to work for the Shanghai Police. I told him that, at the time, I believed the police were there to protect people, to see that law and order were enforced, that I did not understand that there are laws and laws... He nodded.

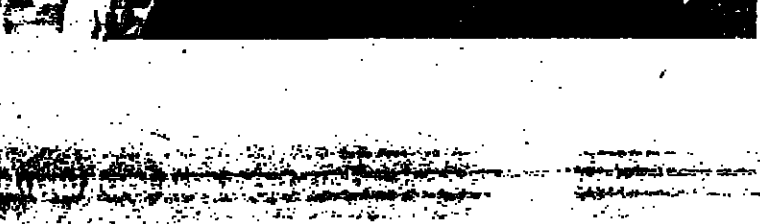

The chairman then said that there was really no need for the commission to retire, and informed me that I was being released with complete "rehabilitation" — in other words, that I was not guilty of the various crimes I had been charged with. Elated, I ran from barracks to barracks to tell everyone I knew the happy news.

BUT THE NEXT day I was back at work, under heavy guard, as if nothing had happened. In the evening I returned to the camp and waited to be freed. At 10 o'clock, the guards came and informed that I return to the barracks. I refused. I told them they would only get me to the barracks if they handcuffed me and dragged me there. I told them I was a free citizen being held in a place of confinement illegally and by force. I told them I had family in Omak, and that instead of losing days of my life in prison, I could spend the time with my family.

They said nothing could be done because the head of the special department had already gone home. "Fetch him," I said. At about 11, the head of the special department arrived. He told me that my documents were not ready, and I would have to wait a day for them. I told him I was willing to return to fetch the documents, but that I was a free and rehabilitated citizen and refused to be kept under lock and key. He went away and made some telephone calls. When he returned, he said: "OK, get this hell out of here, but see that you return tomorrow."

I took a few steps away from him and the gates of the camp closed behind me.

TEN YEARS of Hollywood, especially the last ten, is a mighty long time. Ten years ago, Hollywood was supposed to have disappeared, but this month's Cinematheque — screened in collaboration with the U.S. Information Service (USIS) and featuring more than 40 American films — illustrates how much alive is the city of gold and stars, and with what hard impact it's still looking.

HOLLYWOOD HAS changed, of course, it had to in order to survive, and despite the predictions about the American film industry 10-15 years ago, the change has been for the better. About ten years ago, Hollywood began to climb out of the gloom, with movies like "The Godfather" and "Bonnie and Clyde." Apart from their high earnings, these movies were directed by new men who were in tune with the moods of popular young movements across America. Dustin Hoffman as the graduate with nothing but a comfortable life to look forward to, and Warren Beatty and Faye Dunaway as socially-rebellious bank robbers during the Great Depression, became status symbols to a whole new generation of cinema-goers.

The future of movies was said to belong to anarchic young directors working on shoestring budgets who never heard of story-telling. As Pauline Kael apprehensively put it: "We no longer go to movies; we go to the cinema." There would have been a little room for Hollywood in such a situation. But the predictions were proved wrong, and movies like "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid," "The French Connection," "M.A.S.H.," "Kluge," and "The Godfather" — all of which retained much of Hollywood's professionalism — became popular trendsetters.

Movies may not be as popular as they were — given that the greater portion of cinema-goers are in the 18-30 age bracket. The result is that movies as a whole do not conform to a broad policy of entertainment, but are more frantically aimed at attracting members of a particular subgroup.

expressions of the particular points of view of their makers. Hollywood no longer belongs to all-powerful studio moguls. Directors are virtually assured the right of final editing of their films, and the films themselves often are packaged (script, actors, production and technical crew, etc.) outside the big studios, which contract for distribution rights. More than anything else, the greatest change is that movie production has become more personal. An attentive audience is thus made privy to the imagination, process of the film-maker, who puts more into a story than the story itself. In Woody Allen's "Play It Again Sam" and Mel Brooks' "Blazing Saddles," explicit reference is made to the director, in the form of satirical comedy, to earlier movies in the private-eye and Western genres. Films like "The Last Picture Show" (about growing up in the Midwest during the 50's) and "American Graffiti" (on the same subject) are not merely nostalgic kicks; much of their effect depends on prior knowledge among audiences to the American entertainment tradition, exemplified by Hollywood. They all deft their asp, in one way or another, to a Hollywood long gone, to a time when movies served to glamourise America.

A good example here is a dis-tinction between "Gareweli My Lovely" and "The Long Good-bye," both remakes of Raymond Chandler private-eye stories. The first is almost straight nostalgia, but in the second director Robert Altman sets the period in modern times while still retaining the "thriller-dash" forties. He plays on the way movies used to present their heroes, and in the final scene has the embittered private-eye, unexpectedly shoot his old friend, "What are old friends for?" asks the victim, rationalizing his wrongdoings. Whenupon he is immediately shot. Working away goodbyes like a child, according to the ad for the movie. (All of the movies mentioned here are included in the Cinematheque's January programme.)

Raiders rout Vikings, 32-14

Inchbaker Phil Villapiano joined Brent McClellan and the ball squirmed loose. Hall fell on it, and the Viking threat came up empty. Starting from his own two, Shaber brought the Raiders back. The drive resumed the Viking seven, when it stalled, and Oakland settled for Errol Mann's 34-yard field goal, producing the game's first points.

Minnesota went nowhere on its next possession and, in a matter of moments, the Raiders were at it.
